COPING WITH GRIEF DURING A HOLIDAY

by Kelly Baltzell M.A. & Karin Baltzell Ph.D.

Grieving can become more intense during a holiday.

When grieving, coping is a way of attempting to overcome difficulties and/or problems. Coping isn't necessarily about survival. It is about growth. Grief during a holiday can become a cleansing process—one that makes your loss become a transforming experience for both you and others.

"COPING WITH GRIEF DURING A HOLIDAY"

- Pace Yourself: You do not have to uphold all the obligations you did in the past. Allow yourself the luxury to slow down, release and let go of the old "should have" and "have to" concept.
- To Say "No" is Okay: It is okay to tell others NO. This means you can reject invitations or visitors if you don't feel up to it. People will understand if you are not able to attend every function or event.
- Pamper Yourself: If you deplete your energy you will have less strength to care for yourself or others during any holiday celebration. Therefore, take extra time for you!
- Tell People what You Need: Friends and family will not know how to help you or relate to you unless you are specific about your wants and needs. Tell others what you need. Ask for help. Then congratulate yourself when you do.
- Make New Rituals: When you make a new tradition it signals to yourself and others that your life has changed. A new tradition does not mean that your old traditions are any less important.
- Honor Traditions: Traditions hold many emotions for people. After a loss some traditions may become more or less important. Let people know what traditions are meaningful to you and that you want to keep. It is okay to let some traditions go.
- Remember Your Physical Needs: Eat, sleep and drink plenty of liquids to maintain your physical strength. Be sure to keep your environment clean and orderly to help your emotions and keep you on an even keel.
- Tell Others Exactly what Holidays are Important to You. You may take it for granted that others know what holidays and religious observances are landmarks for you. They don't. Advocate and inform others. They will be grateful and so will you.
- Crying is Okay: Let the tears flow. You need to feel comfortable expressing yourself wherever you are. Crying is a natural outlet of grief. Do not apologize.
- 10. Make Action Plans: During the holidays life can be busy and stressful. Before that special holiday arrives make a plan regarding how you are going to cope with stress. Make a list of people you can call when you need support and places you can go for solace and healing.
- 11. Consult Your Family and Friends: Talk to your family and friends to see what they want to do during the upcoming holiday. Many people may be feeling the same things you are feeling but may not know how to discuss them with you.
- Lean on Your Faith: Remember to touch base with your source of spirituality. It will bring comfort, strength and internal wisdom.
